Brent Brown introduced Dr. John Maynard

Our guest speaker, Dr. John Maynard addressed some key issues facing health care today in British Columbia. He also described his impressions of the emerging family medicine “crisis”. We can only touch on a few key points he delivered.

He outlined two realities that impact the approach and results of Vancouver Coastal Health.

- We enjoy better health than at any time in human history,
- BUT there is Distress for the public in questions of access for providers in the ability to cope with demand.

Today, life expectancy at birth for the total population in B.C. is over 80 years, and the demand for medical services continues to increase dramatically. The fundamental issue now is the imbalance between the demand for services and the capacity to deliver. The situation today of demand being out of balance with supply results in:

- Patient dissatisfaction
- Poorer health outcomes
- Staff/system resources being ineffectively utilized

One reason cited for the imbalance is rising surgical demand.

Compared to 1990/91 an 80 year old British Columbian today is:

- Twice as likely to have a knee replacement
- Twice as likely to have cataract surgery
- Twice as likely to have a coronary bypass
- EIGHT times more likely to have an angioplasty
- Way more likely to ski, hike, run or bike.

An ideal scenario would see demand and supply in balance with:

- Patients satisfied
- Clinical outcomes optimal
- Staff/system resources maximized.

There are no simple answers as to how we reach that ideal scenario, but VCH is now creating efficiencies towards this end through outsourcing of non-medical activities, sustainable program/process improvements, consolidation of services, and benchmarking of workforce staffing levels and mix.

Dr. Maynard expressed his ongoing frustration with those who say any change to our basic universal health system will result in a “U.S.” style health care system. He strongly believes that is not the case and pointed out there are many different models of effective health care delivery elsewhere. In other countries a number of alternative approaches have been incorporated to improve effectiveness both on the demand and capacity sides. He said he hoped that politicians and others who have investigated systems elsewhere will push for effective improvements here so that the ideal balance may yet be reached.

During his presentation, Dr. Maynard provided us with far more detailed information on these and other issues, as well as a thought provoking discussion on the state of family medicine in urban B.C. Perhaps some of his other presentation content may appear in a future Health and Lifestyles column.
